Risk Disclaimer

Trading networks are made up of computers, also known as nodes, that interact on a direct, peer-to-peer basis, without the need for third parties.

Within a Trading network, information is distributed to every single “node” on the network. Each node has an updated copy of all recorded data. BSE & NSE networks can also distribute data so that certain private information can be validated without that information being transferred to a third party.

Data is validated by using an agreed-upon consensus mechanism, which often involves the other computers on the network checking the validity of the data before it becomes permanently imprinted onto a blockchain.
